REVIEW: K FUSION HAIR SMOOTHING TREATMENT

LIZ DAVIS BOOKED HER UNRULY CURLS IN FOR THE K FUSION SMOOTHING TREATMENT. HERE'S WHAT WENT DOWN...

There are a number of ways to straighten Afro hair: blow-drying, relaxing, and of course using straighteners. A Brazilian blow dry, though, was never a viable option in my mind. I doubted its ability to straighten out the super-kinks that my hair possesses, and worrying stories about dangerously high levels of chemicals involved cemented my concerns. I ruled it out.

However, that all changed when I came across the K Fusion Hair Smoothing Treatment. It's a Brazilian blow dry treatment with a difference: it's 100% formaldehyde free, packed full of protein and hydrolysed keratin, and infused with argan oil. Sounds good, but is it for Afro hair I asked? After seeing before and after pics I was sold.

Ready for the treatment, I headed down to the Marlon Wright Hair Salon in Twickenham, Middlesex on a blazing hot Saturday afternoon (4th July 2015).

I walked in with finger-detangled hair and mixed emotions. My nervousness was soon eased, however, as Marlon and his team made me feel comfortable and gladly answered my (100) questions.

First up was a good wash with L'Kerabelle Clarifying Shampoo followed by detangling. Marlon made this look too easy as he used a Tangle Teezer to glide through the knots. Now ready, the treatment was applied painstakingly to my hair, starting at the nape. Then it was left to dry for 30 minutes.

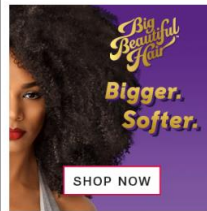

After a quick rinse, my hair was blow-dried then flat ironed to lock down the cuticle and seal in the keratin treatment. Four hours later, I was able to see the full results that I had waited so long for. I now had shiny, super-straight hair that was soft to the touch and wowed everyone by the difference! But for how long I thought. With high-humidity levels that threatened to wreck havoc on any heat-styled hairdo it didn't look promising.

Keep your eyes peeled for my two-part hair diary to find out how my new 'do stood up to humidity, the first wash post treatment and an intense gym session.
